“ The MONKS went in for botanical cures - they had servants - worked them civilized hours. The Monastery comes from Elizabethan times so far as I can learn - they did not confront in religious matters but changed when expected to do so - put religious iconography under the hearth and buried it deep in the fields.

They preferred to get on with what they believed in ...”

“ ... Some recruits were taken in at an early age because they had this state of mind - mildly scientific

- others are Widowers and others possibly men looking for a sane way of life ...

The MONKS are strict about hygiene - sanitary arrangements ... you ALWAYS WASH BEFORE YOU EAT ...

They had to be very careful in the early centuries or they could be accused of witchcraft, Black Arts ... they did not visit the sick but left that to another branch of Monks who could dare to try a botanical remedy

if there was not a PHYSICIAN in attendance WITH DIRTY FINGERNAILS

An important point is that they all seem to live into their 90s and remain healthy ... ”

« ... In the 18th century they would receive polite visitors even have middle class ladies to tea but they were always sure of their background ... A rise of intelligence at this time begins to happen over health.
